About The Washington School of Ballet

Co-founded in 1944 by the late Mary Day and Lisa Gardiner, The Washington School of Ballet (TWSB), the official school of The Washington Ballet, is recognized nationally and internationally for its classical training and dedication to excellence in dance and dance education. The school trains more than 800 students at its three campuses throughout the greater Washington, DC area. TWSB curriculum includes creative movement, pre-ballet, boys' classes, and a graded program for children through young adulthood. The school's syllabus has been formulated by School Director Kee Juan Han, and is based on the traditional training for classical ballet technique.

About TWSB's Upper Division Summer Intensive Program

The Washington School of Ballet's Summer Intensive gives students from around the world the opportunity to study with the school's acclaimed faculty during a five-week course into which students are accepted by audition only. Upon acceptance, students will be assigned a specific level. Parents are invited to attend the culminating performance. Students who participate in this program may be selected for TWSB's year-round Professional Track or Trainee Program.
